THAT over fruitful source of annoyance, the Blockade of Hongkong, seems as far from removal as ever; indeed, the position seems to grow worse. In one of the numerous dispatches written on this subject the writer, if our memory serves us, said that if what the people of Hongkong complained of was interference by the cruisers with junks in British waters a few police launches could put an end to that. We have got our launches, but the remedy proves to be of no effect. If they succeed in making a capture the prisoners are discharged by the Court and are ready to take advantage of the next opportunity of making B prize of any unfortunate boat which may be so daring as to attempt to enter the free port of Hongkong without paying toll to the Emperor of China. The recent case tried in the Supreme Court afforded evidence of the nature of the Customs stations, which, however, was already sufficiently well-known. They are established for the express purpose of levying duty on the imports to and exports from Hongkong, irrespective of duties payable at the port from which the junk comes or to which she is going. The mandarin in charge of the Fa Tow Moon station was called as a in the case we refer to and was cross-examined by the Attorney-General on this point. The evidence he gave was as confused as Chinese evidence generally is, but the effect of it was what we have stated above. - He also showed that no great importance was attached to the division between Chinese and English waters, but that squeezes were levied in the latter with as much good will as io the former when opportunity offered, and this although the illevality of the proceeding is well known. We will let Mr. Yow CHENG CHUNE speak for himself. He was asked, "Suppose you see a boat on the halfway line do you send out after it?" and bis reply was, "Yes." When interrogated as to the duty levied, he said, "As a rule we take a percentage," by which, we presume, he meant that the sponge was squeezed according to its capacity. Asked "What is the nature of the duty; is it an import duty, an export duty, or a toll?" he replied, "It is an import and export duty; it is not a toll.

He ought to pay duty, and after he passed I don't know where he was witness denied that he ever sent his men after boats on the Hongkong side, but at the same time he admitted that he sent his men after the heat in question, which was captured in Pak Sha Wan Bay and within a few yards of our shore, and was taken overtothe Customs station. It also appeared from a case at the Potice Court that the same men or some of I would suggest to his Oriental to pay us a visit, them boarded another boat in the same bay a night or two afterwards. Their boat was servants. As it is, it is almost impossible to captured by a police launch and the men found in it were charged with pimey. The jury

It follows therefore 2.30 this afternoon and continued to-morrow. that Hongkong is practically, helpless in the fails to take it up as an Imperial question. The learned counsel for the prisoners in the case above referred to, Mr. HAYLLAR, Q.O., ridiculed the term "blockade" as applied to This Work is now being prepared for publica- the cordon of Customs station's established-| round the island. Although not quite accurate in a feelinical sense, no better term could be found for the purpose of describing the

In a dispatch to the Secretary of State, however, dated 31st May, 1879, His Excellency laid the following propositions before Her Majesty's The head-quarters are established at Djinkho, not Government: ---That the Chinese Customs Stations where duties are now levied on junks entering and clearing from Hongkong be abolished.

That janks trading with Hongkong pay duties only at the port of place of entry or of clearance on the coast of China, according to a tariff by which duties can be levied at such ports or places on all dubiable goods whatever, except salt, opium, and munitions That as regards sait and munition of war, they are not to be experted in future to the coast of

On these propositions the Secretary of State mvited the opinion of Mr. Lowcock, who happened to be in England at the time. Mr. Lowcook treated the matter with his usual common sense and clearness, and while approving the first three characterises the remainder as "very unsatisfactory," and says they " would | almost lead to the supposition that the entire scheme proposed as the basis of settlement had emanated from the Haito, the Government of Hongkong would be export from the colony and import into vernment had no power to levy." He points out that, so for as Chinese exporters are concerned, the arrangement would simply allow the Customs to collect the duty twice over, in protests against any infringement of the freelow of the nort, and against the continuance of a state of things which never ought to have been allowed to exist. To this the

Secretary of State replied on the 7th November, 1879, pointing out "that the Customs Stations are on Chinese territory rations of the cruisers of the Colony cannot be controlled by Her Majesty's Government." We have also to complain, however, of the pperations of the cruisers or their boats invide the waters of the colony, but appear to small shipments to Singapone excepted, and aphe as helpless here as in the other case. The Secretary of State goes on: "I may point out that such an interpretation [of Sir C. EL-LIOTT'S proclamation | if pushed to its logical conclusion would bind Her Majesty's Government to use force to produce the removal of these stations and cruisers, or at any rate would have required them to interfere by force to prevent the stations being established in white No. 1 round, $2.55 per picul in gunnies, session of a license, but finding that the license the first instance, a course which it would obyiously be impossible to adopt." The use of force would, we decidedly think, not be unjust, but whether it would be expedient now is another question. When Sir Thomas WADE was negotiating the Chefoo Convention be might very reasonably have insisted on the total removal of the blockade, which would have given the Colony a clear and indisputable right to revention is not yet ratified, and in November last year the Secretary of State informed Mr. Lowcock he was going to address a despatch

THE ITALIAN OPERA COMPANY A THE THEATRE ROYAL.

On Wednesday evening the Italian Opera Company gave their eighth performance at the The concert at the Catholic Circle no doubt tended somewhat to reduce the attendance at the theatre. The opera selected for representation was Donizetti's "Lucrezia Borgia," which, on the whole, was successfully produced.
